Fold

Evacuation Name Tag

When children were evacuated from the cities to less dangerous towns and villages they had labels like these attached to their clothes with their name, address, date of birth and school attended.

VE Day

2

Fold

Bicycle lamp

During WW2 bicycle lamps were fitted with a movable metal cover so that the light could be dimmed and directed downward during the night blackouts. As a consequence riding a bike at night became even more dangerous than the air raids.

Wireless

Radios were initially called wireless to distinguish them from the previous way of communication, the telegraph: while the telegraph transmitted electrical signals over a wire laid between stations, a radio transmits without need of wires, hence wireless.
